

TOPIC: „There was a little deer trapped in the bushes. She decided to help”

„No”, the girl yelled when her computer switched off for no reason. She was just winning the game and she was furious. „What happened?”, she yelled again.

„I happened” her mom said, entering the room. „You are sitting there whole day and playing your stupid game! It’s spring. Go outside, get some fresh air!”

„Are you crazy? No, I want to play, this game was important!” It was clear she was frustrated.

„Go, or you won’t be allowed to play for the next three weeks”. Her mother was serious, her voice was harsh. The girl, Suzie, groaned with irritation.

„Fine!”, she sighed, grabbed her jacket, boots, a scarf and walked out of the house. After two minutes of walking Suzie decided to go into the woods. It was still bright outside so she wasn’t worried that the night would catch her. She looked around, green colour was dominating in her surroundings. From her perspective the trees were so huge and intimidating. The air was different too, fresh and cold, but pleasing. She took a deep breath. Suzie could smell the wet grass, trees, flowers that were just growing. She kind of liked it. She even forgot about her game and the way her mother got on her nerves.

„Ouch” Suzie let out a sound when she hit her head with a branch that was really low. She started to massage it to let the slight pain go away when she saw a deer that was trapped in the bushes. She frowned, „Should I call someone or ignore it?” she thought. The deer let out a painful sound. She froze and bit her lip. „Crap...” She wouldn’t admit that out loud, but she was scared. She was also aware that animal service would be too late to come and the deer would be in pain all the time. So she moved slowly towards the animal, it was obvious that it was anxious and uneasy.

„Hey little one” she raised her hands showing the animal that she was harmless. „I won’t hurt you. I just want to help you”, she smiled and when she was close enough to him she crouched beside and looked at its’ leg. It was trapped in a bush and couldn’t get out. She swallowed hard, but decided she wouldn’t give up. „It will be OK, I will just...” she started to unwrap the bushes from around the animal’s leg. The deer jerked, it was breathing heavily and was extremely stressed. „Shhh, just a second...” she whispered and untangled its’ leg completely. She took off her scarf and wrapped it around the animal’s leg. The animal ran away immediately jumping through the bushes. She stood up and smiled looking at it running away.

Suzie just realized the beauty of spring, that it was so calming and just perfect.
